ARE YOU A STUD - OR A DUD?

Separating the men from the boys in the sack.

A woman's point of view

She sits in the darkened theater, intently watching the screen. As the lovers embrace he notices her breath coming more quickly. Unconsciously, one hand begins caressing one of her breasts, tracing the tantalizing curve, stroking, lingering as it circles the nipple...

A man moves closer, entranced with the sensuality of the woman at his side. He does not interrupt. He knows that when the movie is over he will have one of the hottest fucks of his life with this woman.

He brings her a single rose. She never fails to be moved by a man who is sensitive enough to realize the romance of a single rose. He takes it out of the wrapping, and before handing it to her bends and inhales its heady perfume. His hand wraps around hers as he gives it to her. She can already feel her pulse quicken.

He tells her of the exciting intimate restaurant he has discovered and wants to share with her. Already her pussy is tingling with desire, but she knows it will be hours before this man touches her—and when he does, his lips, hands and tongue will play upon her body like the responsive instrument of pleasure it can be for the right guy...

Both of these couples are not only erotic, but they recognize the need to make sex an exciting experience for the people they are with. There's no longer any need to guess if your date or the guy or girl you've just met is a good lay; you can know for sure if you learn how to read the telltale signals a super stud is continuously broadcasting. That's right, a good lover will let you know in many cruise tryst

For our second anniversary, I took my wife on a Caribbean cruise for a week. A couple days into it, we met a couple by the pool. He played football in Miami and his wife was a trophy – with a really nice set of boobs. My wife asked them if they would have dinner with us later and they agreed.

Later that night, we were first to the dining room. They showed up fashionably late and the guy's wife showed up with a low cut blouse and, obviously, no bra. As she sat at the table, her double D rack bounced around as she did ways how fantastic sex will be.

How can you spot a super stud? How do you know if you're a super stud? Read on and find out.

A good friend of mine was recently out with a wonderful, handsome hunk of a guy who promised her shooting stars and the fuck of her life.

He talked a great game plan—in fact, the best fucking she'd ever had.

She couldn't wait to get home. But sadly, it was over before she even knew it had begun. If she'd noticed some of the signals, which we'll discuss, she would have known he was all talk.

THE SIGNALS

If it's just good sex you're after, you can do a lot of screening before the final act by being on the alert for these clues:

• Watch how he eats (no pun intended). Remember, this is before any sexual contact. Does he gulp his food down? If so he's a poor bet. But rejoice if he savors the aroma, allows it to remain in his mouth, to savor its full flavor before he takes the next forkful.

If he enjoys the tastes to the last moment, then this is probably a very sensual man. Of course, while we say "he," the wise man will "read" his date for signals.

Why all this emphasis on sensuality, you might ask, when we're discussing super studs? Every sign is a sign of sensuality and aliveness, because sex is sensuality, nothing more. You must feel your body, savor each movement, taste each flavor, and embrace each sensation, if you are to truly enjoy the sexual pleasures.

You live with your senses. You see, hear, taste, smell and touch throughout your life. It is the degree to which you've sharpened these senses, utilized them to the fullest, experienced every crevice and every height of these senses, that you are alive or not. It is to this degree that you are a super stud or not.

• Observe his clothes, his car, his apartment; but look out for the real clues in his habits. Many very cold and objective guys and girls are extremely classy and talented in these areas. Of course, it is a good sign if he is surrounded by lovely things, good spacing, music, books, and comfort. And of course it is essential that he is clean, concerned with bodily hygiene, and neatness in his home.

But more essential, really, is how he actually lives. Does he always take the same route to work or is he an adventurer, trying new roads, new streets, and new types of transportation? Does he go to the Hilton Hotel at every town and city he visits, or does he try B&Bs, guest houses, out-of-the way and quiet inns, renting a private villa?

Does he go to the same restaurant again and again, or does he try new ones in new neighborhoods with a variety of ethnic cooking? Does he like surprises? Does he have a variety of friends? Does he do more than work at a particular job, staying tight to that field? Or does he have very different hobbies, a totally different avocation, and a daring, self-expressive outlet for energies and drive which is exciting, even thrilling?

One woman I knew told me that she met a rather short, very slender guy who was in his late 40s. She was attracted to him and on finding out that he was an insurance broker, she was convinced that he would bore her to death. However, as they talked she discovered that he loved to go deep-sea diving and that he was especially fond of filming killer sharks off the coast of Bermuda. Her interest immediately flamed and they spent the next week together, screwing each other's brains out.

He was one of the super studs of all time, she told me, and if it hadn't been for the sharks she might have missed that whole week. So watch for those little sparks of his; they just might open a very hot door for you.

different motions. We hardly knew this couple but wished my wife was into swinging cause I was into this gal. His wife and I flirted under the table, making contact with our legs and occasionally she would reach out under the table and grab my leg and leave her hand for a bit.

The next day I was walking around the Lido deck and found her by the elevator – without her husband. I gave her a side hug hello, but didn't release her. She stayed inside my arms and stroked my stomach and let out a little groan.

I started to get excited and asked her if we could go for a walk. We walked up to a part of the

• Watch his attitudes. When he steps outside does he look around, enjoy the scenery, take a deep breath of fresh air, and take a moment to give himself the pleasure of the change? This is true of any change, whether going outdoors, coming indoors, going from one room to another. Does he look? Is he aware of where he is and what he's feeling?

His attitude about the new moment is very indicative of his attitude about you, the person with whom he may or may not be a super stud. Watch how adventurous he is, how experimental, how aware and how interested he is. This attitude about his environment is very essential when your clothes are off and the bedcovers are down.

• Watch if he's relaxed or not. If he's nervous this could be positive because many people use their nervous energy for constructive purposes. But if he's impatient, rushing, goal-oriented, then watch out. This impatient attitude of needing to accomplish in order to feel successful is a warning sign to all sex partners. It doesn't make for super studs. In fact, it makes for major disappointments.

• Watch his eyes. I don't mean to watch for the depth of his gaze, or the intensity of his piercing look. Watch how he looks. Does he stare and not really see, or does he really see? Does he look at you so that you want to check your zipper or lipstick? Does he look at you in a way that makes you know that he knows?—Are his looks enough to say a thousand words, without even a single one?

The eyes are not only the mirrors of the soul; they are also the barometer of the heat gauge. Heavy-lidded bedroom eyes, wide-open stares or mere slits are only the package; check the eyes. Don't be fooled by a lidded look, or sidelong know-it-all glances. Check the pupils, the eyes themselves, not the handsome face or sneering mouth. If you're really observant you can avoid a lot of heartache and frustration if you watch for direct eye contact, eye "heat," and eyes that really see, not just looks.

A male friend of mine once told me the ship that I had purchased a spa pass for. I walked in with her, we changed and met at the hot tub. It seemed like we were the only ones in the facility and started groping each other heavily — like we were doing it for the first time.

Her breasts were spectacular. They were firm but natural and felt amazing. I honestly have no idea who may have been watching us but I was so thrilled to have her. We moved closer together in the tub and I pulled my cock out for her. It was already hard and she wasted no time maneuvering it into her pussy. Deep inside her, I could feel her trembling and panting in my ear hottest chicks in his experience were the ones who saw him, not just his exterior. Then he added, "I guess it was the way they looked inside me and really saw me. Then I knew it was 100 percent "go" with her, she wasn't superficial like most." Of course, we could question how profound we have to be if we want to be or have super studs, but the truth is that a super stud makes contact. He really touches, and in order to do this there has to be a depth, a true "seeing" before such electricity can find the other end of its own circuit.

• Watch his body. I don't mean his shape or his build. Strangely enough, the well-built god-like creatures of the world are not always the super studs. On the contrary, they seem to be so self-involved that they're often thrilled just to give themselves to you, or they expect you to be thrilled just to have the pleasure of their company.

So no, I don't mean their physiques; I mean how their bodies move. Are they stiff and disjointed? Are they round-shouldered and uncomfortable? Do they slouch or drag their feet; sit with their arms folded, protected with crossed legs; watch the floor as they walk? Is there a flow to their movements; is there a rhythm and style?

Watch their chests; are they proud and tall, or folded in? Watch their legs; are they straight and firm, knees straight or bent and practically crouching? Watch their arms: comfortable at their sides, or hanging and tight, folded or twisted?

• Watch his hands. Are they loose and easy, or nervous and twitching? All these are body signs which will point you to a super stud or a poor dud. After all, if you're not comfortable with your body, how can you use it well? Not easily, and that won't make for super sex.

• Animals. Animals? Yes. It's not important whether a person likes animals, or even if he has animals. But do animals like him? Does he gently tap a dog on the head if it wants attention, or does he stroke and feel the fur? Does he mention the difference in feeling the fur of a curly poodle, or silky Yorkie? Does he allow the fur of a plush cat to excite his senses?

This is something to watch for in many areas which involve his touching someone or something. Does he feel it, recognize the differences in texture and tone? Does he get messages from his fingertips which excite him because of the tactile experiences of his fingers?

As he's touching something—a tablecloth, a knife, an animal, his overcoat—imagine his touching you in that same way. Would you like it? This is an essential clue. As he touches, so too will he continue to touch. Be aware.

And so many other clues: Does he watch scenery, remark about the change of weather, notice colors of rooms, or the style of your clothing? Does he touch your hair; enjoy tasting a fine wine or cool lemonade? Can he take pleasure to its fullest and most intense heights, or does he merely accept what is there without adding to it with imagination and daring?

What about you? If he touches like a virtuoso, kisses like Hollywood hunk, looks like George Clooney and moves like a dancer, it won't help unless you have some reactions.

Our sensuality is controlled by our brain. If something turns us off, whether it may be a look or a gesture, a word or an attitude, the switch becomes an impasse. Despite his great prowess, he may not be a super stud, not for you.

Watch your own reactions, your own chemical barometer. If you're hot for him you may bring so much energy to the experience that he can become a super stud. On the other hand, if you're cool and indecisive you may cool him off so that his true super sex skills are put aside for someone who is more interested.

What's a super stud? He is the person who makes you sing and dance because your body wants to celebrate. He plays the right tunes and your insides turn somersaults.

My super stud is a sensualist in every as she rode me under the water. We did it for about ten minutes until we noticed some people opening the spa doors. They walked through and into another area of the spa. We stayed in the hot tub for a while longer as she stroke me to climax and I diddled her clit till she came. Then I said that she should leave first so it doesn't look like we are together.

We rendezvoused a couple more times during the cruise hoping our spouses would not catch on. I asked if I could see her in Miami and was politely declined. Well, you can't blame a guy for trying. But I will have this to remember her.

— Erik, Albany, NY

sense of the word. He plays on his senses the way a pianist plays the keyboard. He chews each bite 10 or 20 times, really tasting the food. He smells and looks at it for a while before even tasting it. When he listens, he closes his eyes so there is no intrusion to his auditory system. When he looks he doesn't speak, he takes it all in, pulling from it bits and pieces of beauty and charm which I rarely see without his pointing them out. And when he touches, his fingers explore; curious, anxious to discover, seeking a new sensation, a new pleasure.

He looks at my body and describes it to me, telling me of the treasures he's finding. He touches me and describes the sense in words that are music to my ears, and heat to my pussy. He studies sexual loving, bringing to it knowledge, awareness and a total openness because he is not jaded. He knows that each time we touch it will be different, better, new...

What makes a super stud? A sensualist is a super stud, and a sensualist is someone who is totally, absolutely alive in every pore of his body. He throbs with life and with anticipation for the next moment; even as he cherishes the sensations he's feeling in the present moment.

A super stud gives so much because he takes in so much through his totally keen sense of his own senses. Now you can put these words into action and be the stud you always wanted to be.

Stacey's visiting her old college flame to see if he's just as good as she remembered. She has a few new surprises though: two piercings that bring some fun into the bedroom! Riding a man until he climaxes is always fun, but having him finish in her mouth afterwards makes the hook up even better!

DO I MAKE YOUR PISTONS MOVE?

I thought of the audition.
Success? Flop? Was I wasting my time?
Or was this the first rung on the ladder to superstardom?
I would have given my left nut to know such things.

I fired up a cigarette and stepped on the gas, pushing my old hatchback to its limit as the empty highway unfurled before me. I was making good time. Barring major road construction or a flat tire I should arrive with an hour to spare, a most precious hour in which to relax and review my lines prior to this afternoon's audition.

And that's when I saw it, the old ramshackle house on the side of the highway. PALM READER, read a weathered wooden sign, faded red letters painted on a sickly yellow background. It was a con, of course. Crystal balls. Tarot cards. What a load of hokum! The dolts dumb enough to fall for that old scam deserved to be taken brown eyes, flawless olive skin, and lustrous raven hair which framed her fine facial features. She couldn't have been a day over twenty-five; which made us peers.

She charged fifty bucks for a half hour. Cash only. Reasonable enough, I thought, forking over the crisp bills. She led me through a beaded curtain into

The part would be a major step up for me, the monster in a low budget horror flick. Not exactly what I had in mind in college, but work was better than no work. I would gladly wear a fur suit and howl at the moon; just so long as the check cleared.

My father thought I was a fool. He was probably right. Still, I refused to follow in his footsteps. Dad was a made man, a capo with one of the most feared families. I could've had it all—a plush car, nice suits, expensive restaurants. But that life just wasn't for me.

It was bad enough knowing that my father had his hands in countless criminal enterprises. Squeezing the wheel, I did my damndest to forget his misdeeds and focus on what lay ahead.

I sped past the roadside attraction without a second glance. But the place stayed with me, refusing to fade from my consciousness, nagging and nagging like a gadfly. What if? I mused, imagining some old gypsy giving me the scoop. I thought of the audition. Success? Flop? Was I wasting my time? Or was this the first rung on the ladder to superstardom? I would have given my left nut to know such things.

"What the hell," I muttered around my cigarette. "It'll be good for laughs."

The palmist was not what I expected.

My vision of a stooped and withered Gypsy crone was blasted to smithereens by one of the loveliest visions I had ever seen. Naomie had beautiful a small room furnished with a small round table and two stiff-backed chairs.

"Have a seat," Naomie told me.

A loose fitting purple dress extended to her ankles. Brown leather sandals cradled her smallish feet. I watched her move about the room, lighting candles with a match she had struck with a theatrical flourish. She was putting on a good show. After all, it was a performance. I appreciated her efforts.

After lighting the last candle she sat in the seat opposite mine, facing me over a tabletop cluttered with the ephemera of her trade—more candles, an astrological chart, a deck of tarot cards, and a crystal ball serving as the centerpiece.

Naomie wasted little time. "Your

“Right or left?” I asked.

She peered at me. “What is it that you wish to know?”

“My future,” I told her.

“Your right hand,” she explained, “will tell me much about your destiny.”

I extended my right hand, palm up, watching amusedly as Naomie did her thing. She held my hand, examining it with intense scrutiny. Her touch was soft, and more than a little exciting. I wondered what was hidden under her baggy dress. Something nice, I reasoned. Something really nice...

Her brown eyes were mesmerizing. Was she a hypnotist, too? I felt like I was being put in a trance. The tension from driving all morning leaked from my muscles. In a physical sense I felt much better. But I was still anxious about the forthcoming audition, riddled with uncertainty and doubt.

“A great opportunity lies ahead,” Naomie told me. “But you must proceed with caution. The path is littered with many pitfalls.”

“Could you be more specific?”

“I’m afraid not. Stay alert. Be aware of your surroundings. Threats can come from anywhere, at anytime. But success can be yours, if you elude them.”

“I can do that,” I assured her.

Naomie regarded me. “You are a confident man.”

“About some things.”

“I love confident men.”

“Is that so?”

She released my hand and exited the room. I sat there, wondering what she was doing. I heard her lock the front door. Seconds later she parted the beaded curtain. Naomie wasn’t wearing a stitch of clothes. I could hardly believe my eyes.

“Now,” she said, “about that great opportunity . . .”

“Okay,” I told her, “but it’ll have to be a quickie. I’ve got an important appointment this afternoon.”

“Of course,” Naomie replied.

I followed her through the curtain, down the hall, and into her bedroom, gazing at her magnificent ass the whole way. She had curvy hips, sturdy, durable. Her room was nothing like the rest of the house. An unmade double bed dominated the space. Dirty clothes were strewn about the dusty hardwood floor. Atop the nightstand, an ashtray overflowed with twisted cigarette butts.

“Pardon the mess.” She sat on the bed. “I’m not much of a housekeeper.”

“No need to apologize. I’m not either.”

I made short work of my clothes, shedding them in record time. They lay in a crumpled heap on the floor. I briefly entertained the idea of folding them all nice and proper. Hell, I didn’t want to show up for my audition looking like a fucking slob. But the thought promptly died when Naomie lay back and spread her legs. She rubbed her pussy, prompting me to stroke my cock. I tugged slowly, sensibly, prepping myself for what was sure to be a fantastic roll in the hay. Naomie writhed and sighed, pleasuring herself adroitly. I grew harder than a brickbat.

Still, I didn’t bang her right away, choosing instead to taste her clairvoyant cooze. I knelt and lowered my face between her thighs, licking her wet, fragrant slit. Naomie raised her legs, pressing my head down with both hands. I poked and prodded her clit with the tip of my tongue, plying her until she begged me to fuck her.

I mounted eagerly, penetrating her with an audible grunt. Naomie had a tight pussy; her silken chute enfolded me in its snug embrace. I paused upon entry, waiting a few seconds to get my bearings, preparing myself mentally for the forthcoming fuckfest. Naomie grew impatient, begging me to bang her in earnest.

“Do it, baby. Fuck me good. Make my pussy come!”

Her breathy banter set me in motion. I thrust repeatedly, plunging my rod in and out, slowly at first, then faster and faster. It wasn’t long before she draped her legs over my shoulders, contorting herself for a thorough pounding. The new position spurred me onward. I thrust harder, reaming her cunt with ferocity. Naomie’s tits jiggled in tandem with my movements. She moaned and groaned with pleasure.

Prolonging the party would’ve been ideal, but the clock was ticking. I couldn’t be late for my audition. I withdrew, leaned over, and jerked my prick; a few tugs was all it took before I drizzled her tits with cream.

Naomie lay there, silent, unmoving. I started to get dressed. I was buttoning my shirt when she told me to open the nightstand drawer.

“Some sort of surprise?” I asked.

“Just do it,” she said.

I did it. The gun was wedged in there with a flashlight and an unopened package of batteries. It was a fine piece, a chrome .45 with Pearl grips. I whistled appreciatively.

“Take it,” she told me.

“Why would I do that?”

“You may need it.”

I picked it up, turned the piece this way and that. Naomi’s lips were set in a grim line. “Pitfalls, huh?” A chill ran down my spine.

"You know how to shoot?" she asked.

"Good enough," I said.

And it was true. Before my father and I had had our falling out he had spent many a weekend showing me how to properly handle a firearm. It had been a while, but I felt like I could use the thing without blowing my foot off.

"I hope you don't need it," she said, "but just in case."

"Yeah," I said. "Just in case..."

I resumed my journey in a state of high anxiety, hoping that Naomie's reading had been off the mark. When she had initially mentioned "pitfalls" I had imagined car trouble, a flat tire, perhaps a speeding ticket issued by a belligerent cop.

Now, getting closer to my destination, I realized that the stakes were much higher. She thought my life may be in danger. I was extra cautious when I stopped for gas, surveying my surroundings carefully before exiting my car. When I went inside to take a leak and pay the clerk I was a nervous wreck, jerking at voices, jumping at shadows.

"You okay, buddy?" the clerk asked.

"Just a little under the weather," I lied.

The final leg of my trip passed uneventfully. I was feeling much better by the time I arrived at the sight of the audition. The farm had been easy enough to find, a testament to the director's directorial skills. I parked on a dirt patch between the barn and farmhouse. I saw no sign of a soul. My hatchback was the only car on the premises.

I started to get out, then froze, thinking of Naomie.

You may need it...

I reached into the glove box, tucked the .45 into the back of my waistband, and slid out from behind the wheel. The director had told me that the audition would take place in the barn, as well as several scenes from the actual film. The big barn door was closed. I stood there, listening for sounds from within. Nothing, not a peep. I rapped on the wood. "Hello, anybody home." Not a sound.

The door hinges needed oil. I entered the barn to the accompaniment of strident squealing. I had grown up in the city, didn't know the first thing about farm life, but the interior looked typical to me. Empty horse stalls, a hay loft, even a small tractor that looked like it was on its last leg. What didn't seem typical was the car, a boat of a two-door sedan waxed and polished to a high gloss. I had seen many cars just like it. My father had one. It was the preferred ride of made men.

The goon popped up from behind a bail of hay like a deranged jack-in-the-box, the gun in his hand barking loudly. I felt the bullets whiz past my cheek. I dropped to a crouch, reaching for my piece as I did so. I brought the gun around, fired a retaliatory round which plowed into the wall beside the goon's head.

I rolled behind the tractor. It was a regular onslaught. A fusillade of lead pinged into the steel frame. Sparks flew.

I returned fire, berating myself for walking into a trap. The director had sounded so convincing over the phone. The goon was a hitter, no doubt, hired by one of the families. My father must've done something to invoke this family's wrath. Instead of striking back at him, they were intent on killing me, his only son.

But I had other ideas.

The empty can of small engine oil on the ground gave me an idea. Sweat dripping down my face, I waited for a lull in the ambush. The goon had emptied his hand cannon. I could hear him reloading, my cue to take action. I grabbed the can and hurled it into the corner. It struck the wall with a loud clatter. The goon took the bait, exposing himself as he fired his freshly reloaded gun at the racket, granting me a perfect angle.

I came out from behind the tractor like a shot, holding the gun with both hands, combat style, and squeezed the trigger. The first round missed. The second punched through his chest, dropping him hard.

Pulse pounding, I stood stock-still, waiting to see if he would get up. He didn't. I walked over. My legs were unsteady. Standing there, towering above the dead goon, I shook my head in dismay. Naomie had been right. She was the genuine article.

It was a damned good thing that I had stopped for the palm reading.

It was almost midnight when I knocked on her door. Naomie answered in a short robe of black silk. Relief flooded her features as I proffered the gun.

"How'd it go? Did you break a leg?"

"Not exactly," I told her.

She welcomed me inside and poured two stiff drinks, listening with rapt attention as I told her what had happened. Her face twisted with disgust. "Those dirty bastards."

"You saved me life, Naomie."

"Come," she said, leading me to the bedroom.

It was good, even better than before.
